Took me a little while to get my brain into gear with this one, but when I did, I was presented with a simple and elegant Tower Defence title. There is no deep and meaningful background story (it is not an RPG after all) and the graphics are simple but more than adequate. You will have to think your way through this one, and it has been an enjoyable experience - I am a couple of levels from finishing the game. Tower placement and the timing of that placement can be very important. The increase in level difficulty has a nice sense of progression. There are a number of maps where you can make limited map changes, and is a great feature. In-game achievements (for various awards) gives extra life to already completed levels. The developers have shown themselves very responsive to queries. Overall one of my best Tower Defence experiences. P.S.
